

CPYRGHT

Piping Good Time
For Dulles at 73

Allen Dulles, retired chief of the (CIA), celebrated his 73d birthday Thursday at his Georgetown home. With the help of a secretary who also used to work for the supersecret intelligence agency, he is editing proofs of his memoirs due for publication soon.

Their work was interrupted the other day by the smell of something burning. Dulles joined the household staff in a search for the fire. Finally one of the maids said: "Pardon me, sir, it's you."

The onetime top spy had absent-mindedly tucked his lighted pipe into his pocket and ruined the jacket of his best suit.